"The Most Useful Citizen of Iowa." In the department of "Interesting People," in the December American Magazine, Ray Stannard Baker writes about Henry Wallace of Iowa-of whom

"I happened to be in Iowa last September shortly after the annual state fair was held at Des Moines. A man whom I met gave me an exuberant account of the varied excellences of the exhibition, of which the people of Iowa were deservedly proud, and wound up with the remark:

"'And finally, every year we have on exhibition out there the most useful citizen of Iowa."

"Who is that? I asked.
"Uncle Henry Wallace," he replied.
"Henry Wallace, indeed, has become not only one of the institutions of the annual state fair, but one of the institations of Iowa. Every day during the fair-and he has followed the practice now for many years-he is to be found to the headquarters of Wallace's Farmer, the journal which he edits, and there te is visited by hundreds of farmers from every part of the state.
